No one will dispute the fact that technology plays a very important role in modern life. However, it can cut both ways. On the positive side, advances in technology as well as hi-tech products have improved every aspect of our life. For instance, jets save us a lot of time when we travel around the world. The computer enables us to make online purchases from home. Cell phones, not to mention iPhones, make it easier for people to keep in touch with each other. Moreover, the Internet has virtually turned our planet into a global village. In one way or another, technology has helped almost all of us lead a more comfortable life than before.

On the negative side, however, technology can easily be used for selfish ends or bad purposes. It can often be used to commit a variety of crimes in a more efficient way. For instance, some people are able to use their computer knowledge to hack into banks and transfer huge amounts of money into their accounts. Worse still, if hi-tech equipment were used in war, it could kill a large number of people and reduce an entire city or country to ruins in a few minutes. The power of technology must not be taken for granted.

Bread might have been the first food that people made. The earliest people pounded nuts and seeds between two rocks to make a kind of flour. The bread made from this flour was flat, heavy, and dry. It probably didn't taste very good. But it was an important food.

Later, people began growing grass seeds themselves. The people called the grasses wheat, rice, and corn. They made flour mills from big, flat rocks. These rocks were very heavy. They had to be turned around and around by horses. Or sometimes the water from a river moved the rocks. The flour improved. So the bread tasted much better, too.
